Not illustrated. 1878 Excerpt: . he was trying to bear his burden himself, and it was too heavy for him. He did not know or he had forgotten the words, Cast your care on Him, for He careth for you. Mrs. Daniels fears about their Dulwich home were realized. The winter was very hard, and her husband found it greatly increased his toil going such a distance to and fro to his work. He did not lose his health, but his spirit was gone, and he lost his work. After some time he was employed by an inferior firm, and among a rougher lot of workmen. Cheer up, mate! said a thoughtless, goodnatured fellow to him, just after singing a stave of Begone, dull care, and invited him to take a glass. Daniels, weary of himself and all the world, consented. In fact, in his misery he had tried the method recommended of drowning sorrow in draughts of ale--with the effect of making his cares heavier and his purse lighter. It was soon hard times in every way for Mrs. Daniels. She knew not what to do, for she could earn nothing by undertaking any work. She was not strong enough for rough work, though she did all her own house tending. She had no extra skill of the needle, for she had married early, and never learned to work for her living. Clearly she saw that poverty was coming; and her simple prayer of three words, Lord, help us,...
