Not illustrated. 1879 Excerpt: .a curious Zulu dance one evening: Miss Colenso had ordered a grass-burning to take place on our account, as it is a very singular and weird sight; of course the fire was not allowed to spread too far. It was a very dark night, and the bright light from the flames lighted up the surrounding country with a lurid glow, bringing out every object distinctly, and the dark figures leaping about the flames looked truly demoniacal. It was not out by the time we went to dinner; but as we were sitting talking over our dessert, a most unearthly noise began outside the house, yells, and groans, and clapping of hands: we rushed to the window and stepped out; there were our fire friends, about thirty in number, headed by Hash the cook, attired in a very short shirt, carrying a small lantern. The natives stood...
